About UofL's Equine Industry Program

There is no educational opportunity quite like the Equine Industry Program offered by the University of Louisville's College of Business. For any young person aspiring to a career in the horse business, no other college degree is as useful. UofL's equine majors take the entire business core, as well as 30 hours of specialized courses in the business of horses. UofL is located in the heart of horse country, so that instruction in the classroom is supplemented with field trips, prominent guest lecturers, and internships.

Individuals who have already completed a baccalaureate degree (BS or BA) may earn a one-year postgraduate Certificate in Equine Business. High academic standards and a unique program have attracted a faculty interested in the education and careers of students, and in the application of sound management to the equine industry.

As a participant in the conception of the original stewards' program, the University of Louisville's Equine Industry Program has been conducting schools and testing stewards since 1989 and judges since 1995.
